

Dialectical Behaviour Therapy (DBT) for Psychiatry Residents

Summary: Dialectical behavioral therapy (DBT) is an evidence-based treatment that is helpful for borderline personality disorder and a wide range of conditions. It helps with self-injury and suicidal behaviours, as well as reducing rates of hospitalization. DBT teaches people how to handle intense emotions by learning specific skills such as mindfulness, interpersonal effectiveness, distress tolerance and emotional regulation.

What is DBT?

Dialectical Behaviour Therapy (DBT) is a type of therapy developed to help people regulate their emotions. It was first developed for those with a diagnosis of borderline personality disorder, but it turns out that DBT is helpful for a wide range of conditions.

In DBT, people learn how to handle intense emotions through various skills such as:

- Mindfulness;
- Interpersonal effectiveness;
- Distress tolerance;
- Emotional regulation.

Key DBT Skills

Mindfulness

People can become “stuck” in their intense and distressing emotions, “I feel terrible; I’m such a bad person for feeling this way.”

Mindfulness meditation can help a person get “unstuck”. It can help them cope with these feelings, and give more options on how to cope, “I’m feeling terrible. Anyone would feel terrible in this situation. This is what I’m going to do about it...”

Mindfulness is one of the core strategies in DBT.

To be mindful:

- Practice being in the present moment, instead of thinking or worrying about the past or future. Focusing on the body (sights, sounds, body sensations, breathing) while letting other thoughts go, can help a lot with worries.
- Learn to look at themselves and the world in a way that helps you to accept yourself, without being critical or judgmental.

Interpersonal Effectiveness

On one hand, human beings are social creatures, and we want to feel connected to other human beings. On the other hand, it is not always easy dealing with other people, especially when other people may have their own issues which lead them to be hard to deal with.

Interpersonal effectiveness teaches you skills on how to deal and interact in a healthy way with others, while helping you get what you want (in a healthy way).

The mnemonic DEAR MAN summarizes key assertiveness strategies:

- Describe the current situation
- Express your feelings and opinions
- Assert yourself by asking for what you want, or by saying no
- Reward the person - let them know what they will get out of it
- Mindful of objectives without distraction (broken record technique, ignoring attacks)
- Appear effective and competent (role play, use your acting skills)
- Negotiate alternative solutions

Distress tolerance

Everyone feels distressed from time to time. It is our body's signal that something isn't right. Feeling distress is actually a good thing, because it lets us know that then we can do something about it.

On the other hand, distress can become excessive, and when it is, we may feel overwhelmed.

When overwhelmed, people often react in ways to quickly reduce our distress in the short run, but which may actually be not so healthy in the long run. Examples of not so healthy behaviours include:

- Self-cutting,
- Addictions (e.g. eating junk food, excessive screen time),

Unfortunately, these reactions don't usually help to solve these problems in the long run, and can end up causing other problems.

Distress tolerance teaches you how to tolerate intense emotional responses using healthy ways that help you stay calm, without making things worse in the long run.

Emotional regulation

Our ability to experience emotions is important for our survival, and is what makes us human. On the other hand, emotions can sometimes become overwhelming. The good news is that there are ways to regulate our emotions so that they do not become overwhelming.

Prevention -- Building up a positive bank account of positives

- Accumulate positive experiences:
 - Keeping busy with positive experiences, e.g. going for a run or a walk with someone; thanking someone for something positive; writing a story; helping out someone, reading a book, etc.
- Build mastery:
 - We all feel better when we improve our skills over time and get good at something. This could be skills such as music, drawing, or athletic skills, or even just learning about something.
- Cope ahead:
 - We all have stresses in our lives, and it is best when we plan ahead on how to cope with our stresses, e.g. upcoming tests; upcoming job interview; upcoming visit with relatives, etc.

Dealing with Stressful Situations

Despite our best efforts, we will encounter challenging situations. The following strategies may help:

- Recognize your feelings
 - E.g. "I'm feeling upset and ignored. I can't believe that my friend didn't say hi to me in front of the others."
- Accept your emotions
 - E.g. "It is natural to feel upset in a situation like this."
- Calm down if you're too upset

- E.g. "I'm too upset to deal with this right now. I'm going to go to the bathroom, and take a few deep breaths before I do anything rash."
- Choose how to respond in a healthy way
 - E.g. "Maybe she's upset with me? Or maybe she was just distracted? Or perhaps too shy? Either way, the safest thing to do is to be nice. When things are quieter, we can talk alone and see what's up. Even if she's upset, if I'm kind and helpful, she'll apologize later. It won't help to get angry and upset at her."
